

Editorial Staff

Editor-in-Chief

Joshua Nadas is a second year Master of Public Policy student at The George Washington University, concentrating in environmental policy. He earned his bachelors degree in political science from the University of Maryland, College Park. Presently, he is a Program Analyst at the National Park Service, working in the Rivers, Trails, and Conservation Assistance Program. Joshua believes that there is nothing like experiencing nature at greater speeds and that everyone should go mountain biking. Additionally Joshua would like to thank his grandmother Selma Bokor for living an inspirational life, and for helping everyone around her achieve greatness.

Managing Editor

Rachel Brody is a second year Master of Public Administration student at The George Washington University. She graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 2008 with a double major in political science and Spanish. After graduation, Rachel worked for the National College Advising Corps as a college adviser. She advised first generation college students and their families as they planned and applied to college. Currently, Rachel is a Program Analyst at M Squared Strategies and will be a federal consultant with Deloitte upon graduation. She loves reading, cooking, and laughing loudly with her friends.

Senior Associate Editor

Alicia Mazzara is a second year Master of Public Policy student at The George Washington University where she is concentrating in urban policy. Alicia graduated from Carleton College in 2006 with a BA in political science and international relations. Prior to pursuing graduate studies, Alicia worked at the Federal Trade Commission on consumer protection, technology, and privacy issues. Alicia is currently a fellow at Govloop and a teaching assistant in statistics at GW.

Associate Editors

Mara Andersen is a first-year Master's in Public Policy Candidate at The George Washington University. She is also a career Foreign Service Officer. After serving overseas in Hong Kong, the United Arab Emirates and China, she is excited to be back in Washington, DC. Mara graduated from The Colorado College with a B.A. in East Asian Studies in 2000.

Anne Berry is a first year Master of Public Policy student at The George Washington University, concentrating in health policy. Anne earned a bachelor's degree in English and a certificate in health policy from Duke University, and a certificate in editing from New York University. She currently works as a research project manager for the American Academy of Family Physicians's Robert Graham Center. Previously, she worked as a communications specialist for a health policy research organization, and, prior to that, worked in book publishing as an assistant editor.

Tanner Daniel is a first year Master of Public Policy student at The George Washington University. He graduated from the University of Richmond in 2008 with a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration. Between schools, Tanner worked for three years as a Financial Analyst for Accenture in Reston, Virginia. He enjoys catching up on his DVR and reading The Economist.

Rebecca Dilday is a first year Master of Public Policy student at The George Washington University. She graduated from Elon University in 2007 with a Business Administration major and International Studies minor. Rebecca is currently working for The US Department of Health and Human Services constructing Medicare policy and budget analysis in the Secretary's Office of the Budget. In her free time, Rebecca likes to run, eat and plan her upcoming wedding.

Anderson Heiman is a first year Master of Public Policy student at The George Washington University. Anderson graduated from Brandeis University in 2008 as a double major in English Literature and Moral Philosophy. Prior to pursuing his graduate studies, Anderson worked as researcher, advocate, and analyst for AARP Montana and the Lymphoma Research Foundation.

Kristin Hubing is a first year Master of Public Administration student at The George Washington University, where she earned her BA in International Affairs in 2005. Prior to pursuing her graduate studies, Kristin spent five years working in development at Partners In Health, a global public health non-profit. Kristin enjoys reading, watching movies, drinking tea, and playing Balderdash.

Diane Mars is a Master of Public Administration candidate at The George Washington University, where she is a member of The Trachtenberg School's faculty and career selection committees and Diversity and Inclusion Committee. She earned a BA in English from the University of California, Berkeley in 2005. Diane has experience working in higher education publishing, legal support, and civil society building. Her academic interests include federal management, cross-sectoral collaboration, and international relations. Diane enjoys perambulations, dog-watching, and corny jokes.

Kelly McCoy is originally from San Jose, CA. Kelly graduated from Chapman University in 2003 with a dual Bachelors of Art in Peace Studies and Legal Studies. Kelly's focus on promoting peace and freedom has taken him along a contradictory path, first to Bosnia with an NGO and then to the US Army for four combat tours to Iraq and Afghanistan. Currently attending The George Washington University's Trachtenberg School as a Masters of Public Administration candidate, Kelly is in training to become a Strategic Plans and Policy Officer for the US Army. In his spare time, Kelly enjoys writing about national security and Veterans issues in his blog.